

The Light Connection

COMPLIMENTARY

The Revolution in Evolution

*Stephen Lewis
and the Technology of Healing*

Stephen Lewis, Co-Founder of EMC²

The Technology of Healing: An Interview with Stephen Lewis

• Interview with Stephen Lewis by Susan Meeker-Lowry

In May of 2003, Stephen Lewis, co-founder of Energetic Matrix Celebration of Consciousness, LLC (EMC²) was interviewed by Vermont-based economist and ecologist Susan Meeker-Lowry, author of Economics As If the Earth Really Mattered and Invested in the Common Good.

Susan Meeker-Lowry: I'd like to start with some basic questions about the AIM Program and the process of energetic balancing. What are they and how do they work?

STEPHEN LEWIS: AIM stands for "All-Inclusive Method." It is a spiritual technology, the purpose of which is to remove energetic imbalances which impede the flow of the life force. These imbalances exist in what we call the Energetic Matrix, or the higher self or true self. Participants' photographs are placed on the QID (the computerized Quantum-Consciousness Imprinting Device), which is referred to as being "on the tray." Subtle energy balancing frequencies are applied to the person's photo which are transmitted via the photo directly to the participant. The balancing energies are used by the participant's higher self to neutralize energetic imbalances.

SML: Tell me more about these frequencies.

SL: Everything is energy. You, me, trees, emotions, illnesses, everything. And everything vibrates at a unique frequency, including diseases. For every imbalance there is a frequency that will neutralize it. AIM delivers thousands of balancing frequencies for both physical and karmic (hereditary) energetic imbalances. It also delivers special activating frequencies that enable your higher self to select those frequencies you need, and ignore those you don't need. That is also true for enhancing frequencies that help increase your life force and ability to respond to energetic crises.

SML: You give the frequencies the names of illnesses, yet you don't actually cure illnesses?

SL: I have never been given so much opportunity for so many disclaimers in one sentence. I am truly blessed. First of all, everything does have a frequency, including diseases; however, there is no acceptable proof that the frequency of the disease is actually the disease. In this country, there are very specific laws about how diseases may be diagnosed. We use no acceptable diagnostic technique. We make no claims as to disease nor are we permitted to do so. On the other hand, I believe we are the authority on energetic imbalances. If we find an energetic imbalance associated with a disease in units of consciousness, we say just that, you have that imbalance in your consciousness. As to your next politically incorrect statement, Susan, EMC² does not cure anything. In fact, we don't heal anything either. What we do very simply is help YOU heal yourself. Of course, no one else can heal you but you. Our holographic technology simply forces you to focus on your healing without cessation.

SML: Why do you use a photo?

SL: Photos are easier to identify and easier to store than blood, spit or hair. Are you familiar with holograms?

SML: They're three-dimensional pictures and any piece of the hologram contains the whole?

SL: Right. The holographic principle is a concept in physics. If you read the works of David Bohm, Niels Bohr and other physicists they say that the universe is actually a three-dimensional projection no more real than a hologram, and that everything in the universe is infinitely interconnected. Thus anything that is unique to you, including your photograph, contains all existing information about you at any level. I could use hair or spit or blood or a tooth, but photos are easier to work with, and less invasive. They are also a clear indication of the hologram being energetic.

SML: So it seems that the indigenous people who won't let their picture be taken because they believe it will steal their soul were on to something.

SL: These so-called primitive people understand the holographic principle. And, most importantly, they live it. They can't do the math but so what? There's a good chance that I'm a far better mathematician than either Christ or Buddha but that has nothing to do with anything. Christ and Buddha had quantum consciousness. Their hologram encompassed the entire universe. That's why Buddha could speak of being in the oneness. That's why Christ could say, "What you do to the least of mine you do to me." Because they felt the connection they have with all things and all people. I must take it on faith because I'm still a work in process as are most of us. As an aside, I think it is worth noting that the holographic principle is a contemporary name given to a spiritual reality that is fundamental and basic to human consciousness. As such, it provides an indestructible link between science and spirituality. To me, the hologram is our path to the God particle.

Stephen Lewis

SML: EMC² stands for The Energetic Matrix Celebration of Consciousness. Why do you consider it a religion?

SL: It's a religion in that we have core beliefs that define, in a spiritual sense, the structure of consciousness, nature and the universe. In other words, the way the world works. The name reflects our belief in the spiritual implications of Einstein's equation, $E=mc^2$. And, it confirms that consciousness is essentially spiritual. Our doctrine includes the belief that if individuals are able to change their level of consciousness, which involves a spiritual changing of their energetic matrix, they are able to heal themselves. Also, we must make a distinction between diagnosing and treating and hopefully curing, which are in the bailiwicks of medicine, and healing, which is proprietary to spirituality. Whether it's an organized spirituality or not doesn't matter. Because what we do is in the realm of healing, as opposed to the realm of curing, it must have a designation that indicates that distinction. Treating and curing proceed from the outside, in. Healing begins at that deep, dark, dense mass that is within us and brings it to the outside, to the light of consciousness.

SML: You said you were guided to discover AIM. How?

SL: I've been fascinated by energy all my life. I've studied Oriental medicine, philosophy, and religion which are based entirely on energy. In fact, among my degrees are those in acupuncture and homeopathy and I knew, intuitively, that if everything is energy, then anything can be changed. I also understood that consciousness creates the way we live, our well-being, our ill-being, etc. And so, I realized that to implement and use this knowledge, I'd have to find a method of measuring life in units of consciousness. That was my goal, that was my vision, and eventually it was my revelation. And the revelation came to me, I believe, because of that prolonged, sustained vision. I think that's the link between vision and revelation.

SML: Was this a process of many years?

SL: Oh absolutely. It still is. The book, Sanctuary, is just a coalescence of things, "thus far." The vision was the basis, the revelation is the continuing fruition. I take no credit for this revelation of how to measure life in units of consciousness. It came from a higher source. Once I understood it, I understood the infinite possibility of change. I understood that consciousness creates your ill-being or well-being.

The best examples are the studies of people with multiple personality disorders (MPD). Take something as concrete as diabetes. It's sugar in the blood. It's material stuff. Now when these people who have MPD shift personalities, in an instant, not in the 120 days it takes to make red blood cells, they are no longer diabetic. This has been documented countless times. The diabetes was created by a particular consciousness, and once that was no longer present the manifestation of diabetes disappeared. Then when they went back to the first personality, immediately, the blood was diabetic again. The second personality may have had hemorrhoids, but that's a different personality's problem. Think about that for a second.

SML: But you have the same physical matter sitting in front of you.

SL: Well, it is to our weakened perceptive abilities. It's totally different energetically. Wasn't it Blake who said, "If the doors of perception were cleansed, everything would appear to man as it is, infinite." I hope it was Blake who said that since we quoted him in our book. We are just looking at the shell. And this is true of everything we call disease. Now, once I understood what was possible, I also understood that it had to be removed from the theoretical laboratories of scientists. It had to come out of the ivory towers and into everyday life.

SML: So you wanted to take this reality and do something useful with it for healing.

SL: Well, the point is, if consciousness creates our life as we live it, consciousness is indistinguishable from spirituality — and from healing. Understanding this provides some insight into the increase in books like The God Particle, or The Seat of the Soul by quantum physicists. Because all of a sudden they understand that spirituality is the life blood and the form of quantum mechanics and physics.

SML: How would you define healing?

SL: Healing is the process of using your consciousness and elevating it to remove imbalances that are created by a lower level of consciousness. That lower level of consciousness was inevitably created by the manifestation of a failure, a failure of the courage required to feel something emotionally painful. That's the basis of why only you can heal yourself. No healer can heal you. That doesn't change the fact that healers are the most important people in our lives. But, they don't heal anyone. In fact, my assistant believes they should be called consciousness connectors.

SML: They make it possible for me to heal myself.

SL: Yes. By elevating your consciousness.

SML: Does that have anything to do with karma, either good or bad?

SL: Well, Susan, the only good karma is a dead karma, to coin a phrase. Let me give you an image that makes it slightly less cryptic. I see karma as a crate full of rocks that you drag around by means of a rope that is wrapped around your throat. Each rock is an unresolved emotional issue. As you resolve an issue, a rock is removed from your crate. Would you like to have a second crate you drag around full of trophies celebrating each rock you've removed?

SML: You don't make it sound very tempting.

SL: It isn't. That's why I don't believe in good karma. I believe in good deeds and bad karma. No trophies. Sad but true, at least on the personal level.

SML: Is it different at other levels?

SL: Yes, at the collective level something very similar to karma exists, and it is the cause of our being forced to our choice point. I believe it's mandatory that the technology of a culture be in the service of, and be subordinate to the spirituality of that culture. Otherwise, technology becomes a heartless, soulless cannibal. If you allow that to happen, you've got to be an idiot to not be concerned about becoming the next meal. It's tantamount to introducing Frankenstein to your extended family. We, humanity, are an interdependent trinity. If our brain is not mitigated by our heart and our soul, it has no checks and balances to prevent it from creating eventual and catastrophic destruction in its pursuit of relatively instant and temporary gratification. Unfortunately, that is precisely what we have allowed to happen. We have permitted, even encouraged, blind, greedy, irresponsible technology for hundreds of years now, culminating, by the end of the twentieth century, in the creation of an energetic imbalance so monumental that it cannot be dealt with, technologically. It can only be transcended by applied spirituality and consciousness. That is our collective karma, and is the message of this millennium. The only solution to this problem is to have our technology become subordinate and begin to serve our spirituality. Then, ironically enough, virtue will indeed become its own reward, because the highest law is natural law, which is spirituality — which is consciousness — which is the Law of God.

We, humanity, used to know that, then, somehow, we've forgotten it. Well, we had better "remember-up," fast.

For more information about energetic balancing, contact EMC² at 1-877-500-3622. www.energeticmatrix.com

How to Enroll in The AIM Program of Energetic Balancing

Please, fill out your application for AIM Energetic Balancing and attach a picture of yourself (you alone preferably head to toe with no other people or animals, or pictures of people or animals in the photo).

Contact your Facilitator. They will assist you in processing your AIM application and provide mailing instructions (EMC² assigns you a Facilitator once you request an application).

EMC² performs an initial life force check from your photo. Your Facilitator will inform you of the results of this life force check. We place your picture on the trays which deliver the balancing frequencies.

You immediately begin receiving balancing frequencies which assist in your self-healing. To help set your intention, we encourage you to use EMC² AIM Goal Cards and watch the self-healing affirmation videos.

aimprogram.com

877-500-3622

EMC² - Energetic Matrix Church of Consciousness, LLC